Hot Bagels

"It's kinda hard, like a roll, and you put lox and cream cheese on it," explains a lovely young Chinese woman. A small child figures it out: "They use a sort of cookie cutter thing . . . maybe." September 2 was the first public showing of "Hot Bagels—The Hole Story," an 11-minute educational video piece produced by Eugene's Burma Road Productions. The show's a delightful mix blending kid's humor, archival photographic material, local interiors shot inside Humble Bagel's bakery, and some exterior shots done in Portland.

Co-producers Jerry Joffe and Steve Christiansen produced, scripted, and edited the show; Jerry directed, Steve did the camera work. Loren Sears handled lights and sound; original music is Susan Kennedy's. When Humble Bagel commissioned the piece last spring, Joffe and Christiansen basically moved into the bakery for three days. The night they videographed inside the oven, the automatic pre-heat system came on, and things got hot. Mostly Christiansen, who was in there with the camera.

Joffe says they'd like to sell "Hot Bagels" to a national cable network like Calliope. When the new cable access community television channel comes on-line, maybe "Hot Bagels" will be shown to a larger audience. Burma Road will enter the show in educational film and video festivals around the country as well, and they will try to market it to school districts, libraries, community centers, and other educational institutions. As Joffe puts it: "We want it in every 4th, 5th, and 6th grade classroom in the country. . . ."

As Sweet As Honey

Radio listeners get a sweet treat Thursday night, the 23rd, with the Oregon premiere of Marcia Mint Danab's audio celebration of the Jewish holidays Rosh Hashana, Yom Kippor, and Sukkot. KLCC's "Songs of Work, Struggle and Change" will debut the 30-minute program; host Will Doolittle will follow with half an hour of Jewish music. Portland's KBOO will air the program as well.

Danab worked for over a year to blend taped interviews she conducted with persons of Jewish immigrant backgrounds (some from Eugene and Portland) with Jewish holiday music to create this sound collage.

The Oregon Committee on the Humanities awarded Danab a grant to produce and distribute the program to National Public Radio stations throughout the country. NPR will take it from the satellite, for free. By December, Mint hopes to have her next piece, on the holiday Hanukah, ready for nationwide distribution through NPR. Also, many of the uncut interviews will comprise an oral history to be stored in the archives at the University of Oregon and at the Jewish Historical Society in Portland.

Listen Thursday night, September 23, at 7:30 p.m. to KLCC 89.7 FM for the first part of "Jewish Holidays—As Sweet As Honey."
